New products Fall 2011

Build your own Noah's Ark

A dream come true: At the Leipzig hobby and modeling fair (30th september through 3rd october 2011), visitors will be able to see the scroll saw work of Noah's Ark for the first time. The assembly includes one hundred figures and is 16 inches long.

But of course, professional miniaturist as he is, Volker Arnold will also exhibit the 2.4 inch-version with 54 figures as shown in the picture. The 1:48 building plan and the 1:288 DIY kit will be available at his booth, in addition to many other news.

Dollhouse goes 1:1000

Fans of the smallest dollhouses, get your magnifiers! Some of our news won't be easily visible to the eye. For example, the new and improved 1:144 playroom is now equipped with its own 1:1000 dollhouse (see left).

Hobbyists can make use of the new design elements for their model trains and dollhouses. The kits are made of very thin (0.16 inches) wood veneer which is extremely flexible due to a layer of fabric between the wood. The individual parts are easy to push out of the frame and are mounted by means of tweezers and domestic glue. Beginners don't have to worry: All kits come with step-by-step instructions.

New train accessories

Plus, there will be more accessories for the 5 – 7.5 inch train facilities. These 1:1000 arrangements were first presented at the Leipzig fair in 2010. Since then, the choice of houses and vehicles (see picture below) has grown steadily. The miniature settlements, landscapes and accessories are carefully planned until the very last detail.

The first 1:1000 model train-workshop took place in Stuttgart last February. See below what a student was able to make.
